Tumblr Inception is about having a tumblr within a tumblr. No other tumblr theme available has recreated the basics of the dashboard into a tumblr profile. My audience is anyone who is a mega fan of tumblr and wants to be able to have their own profile emulate the dashboard that they scroll through so often. In order to create this, a lot of research had to be made to get the exact tumblr color, figure out which positioning will most likely resemble the dashboard and so on. Some people might call this theme meta, some people might call it stupid, but the main message of tumblr is to be able to be .yourself and just shake off when the haters gonna hate

Wireframes

Through creating a new tumblr theme, I had the idea of re-creating the dashboard, and making almost an inception of having a tumblr within a tumblr. The basics would be having the profile page look like the basics of the dashboard while the peralink page of a single post would resemble a regular tumblr page, as shown in the wireframes below

Design

Once the initial visions of the tumblr theme were created, the designs were further enhanced to include colors and images in which the main color is the exact shade of blue that tumblr uses. The search and log in buttons remained as a placeholder for the actual .buttons that would be used in the final build

Build

The code for the single post page was created within the same file as the user profile, however there was some issue that as yet to be resolved in the design of the page. Although it seemed to have been coded correctly, when a post is selected, only the original link of the post is shown , as seen below

Build

Once the code was created for the tumblr theme, the basics of the tumblr theme were still present in the profile with the logo, profile icons, and block posts created. The final product for the tumblr profile was made perfectly compared to the initial wireframes and designs
