Craigslist Revisioned

The site I chose to redesign is Craigslist. Craiglist looks like a bunch of html links thrown together and the listing pages seem compltely unorganized. My version of Craigslist has more color, images, and gives a much more appealing atmoshpere to Craigslist. By clicking on this version of Craigslist, you indicate your location, needs, and that you will be using Craigslist in a responsible manner. I feel that this makes it seem like a much safer webiste to use and maybe get rid of that reputation that you may need to bring pepper spray when seeing an apartment on Craigslist.

For the initial vision of the reivented Craigslist, wireframes were created to develop the first ideas and visions of what the website should look like. As a result a home page, list of items page, an item page, and log in page were each created.

List of Items Page

Once the initial visions of Craigslist were completed, each page that was to be built was further designed to include images and more color. This gave a better idea of what the website would look like, and any changes needed ot be made to the outlook in order for the pages to look their best.

Build

The List of Items Page went through layout issues as images from the items became askew and would not hold in place. Although now the solution of layout columns would fix this issue, there was not enough time to fix this issue as well as finiishing the final project that is also due.

Build

Once all the design was complete, it become time to build the new and improved Craigslist prototype. The Home Page had an issue in which the drop down menu would not appear. The writing for the bottom also became misplaced and became one with the images. This was looked into, however time ran short for the project and the Home Page was left without a drop down menu.

Build

The Log In Page is the only page created that resembles the intial design. The user is able to actually put in any input through the keyboard into the page, however this information isn›t saved. All together, this project seemed to collaspe mostly due to not enough time or knowledge of the material.

Build

The item Page was not able to worked on much, and looks extremely different to the design for the page. The main reasoning behind this page not being completed was due to time constraints and that there wasn›t enough knowledge of layouts to be able to finish the page before other projects piled up.
